Beer Glassware Catalog

Glassware manufacturers offer scores of glasses suited for beer service and brewers often adopt unique glasses to symbolize their brands. A number of glasses have strong associations across many brands within a specific style or region. In this catalog, we have tried to identify those common glasses and provide information on them. While none of these associations are iron-clad, this guide can provide a useful starting point in selecting glassware for specific beers.

This catalog is divided into two sections. In the first section, we look at the glassware from each of the four major beer cultures, giving a picture of each glass along with basic information about its use. In the second section, we list more than 70 styles of beer and list one or more suitable glasses for serving them.

GERMAN GLASSWARE

Germany's rich brewing culture gives us a full range of glasses associated with specific styles. The beer cultures of Czech Republic and Austria both contribute to and draw from this culture as well.

BELGIAN GLASSWARE

In Belgium, nearly every brewery picks a distinctive glass to associate its beer with, thus even within one style you'll typically find a range of different glasses used in Belgian bars. This collection points out some of the more common glass shapes, but many, many others exist. Nearby French brewers often follow the same conventions.

ENGLISH, SCOTTISH, AND IRISH GLASSWARE

Bars throughout the United Kingdom and Ireland use the nonic glass, but some other traditional variations are seen. Half-pint versions of most glasses are also found.

UK1 	UK2 	UK3
Nonic pint I Serving: 20 UK oz / 0.57L / 19.2 US oz Standard pint glass for UK ales.	Nonic pint II Serving: 0.47-0.56 L / 16-19 US oz Slimmer and often smaller. May be used for stronger beers.	Pub mug Serving: 20 UK oz / 0.57L / 19.2 US oz Classic UK ale mug.
UK4 	UK5 	UK6
Tulip Pint Serving: 20 UK oz / 0.57L / 19.2 US oz Strong association with Irish Sout, but also used for other ales.	Thistle glass Serving: 20 UK oz / 0.57L / 19.2 US oz Traditional glass of Scotland, but seen only occasionally even there.	Snifter Serving: 0.15-0.3 L / 4.8-9.6 US oz Suitable glass for strong ales of all types.

AMERICAN GLASSWARE

While some brewers have put forth special glasses for their brands, American beer culture has so far generated only one widely-adopted and distinctive glass.

A1

Shaker Glass

Serving: 0.4-0.45 L / 14-16 US oz

Utilitarian American beer glass.

Recommended Glasses for Each Style

The list below gives more than 70 modern beer styles and lists one or more recommended glasses for serving that style. The glasses are listed by the identification number given in the preceding section. Remember that these recommendations are not absolute. Most beers can be served in more than one style of glass and most glasses can be used for more than one style of beer.
